III. Research

2015-2019 Funding by the German Government is sponsoring a new Research Center that will support a collaboration between the Wittgenstein and Garfinkel archives and fourteen research projects that are organized around the theoretical parameters of their work. The Center is called “Media of Cooperation” and the research will examine the critical role of cooperation in facilitating communication and understanding in the context of high tech devices, applications and situations. The Center is housed at the University of Siegen, Germany and is a DFG Research Training Group.

2009-2010 Research funded by the City of Paris International Scholars Research Program supporting an appointment to the Marcel Mauss Institute at l’Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Science Sociale, Paris, to engage in collaborative work involving sequential social orders and their relevance for both Ethics and human machine interaction with members of the Marcel Mauss Institute. We have begun a collaborative effort between colleagues in Paris, London and the US to examine the technical worksite issues related to medical records (data input requirements, machine use requirements, human output requirements – and relate these to human comprehensive requirements of all users – including doctors). The collaborative venture will combine important research on medical and medical records work in three very different domains (18K Euros).

2007- 2010. Research funded by the MITRE Corporation involving the formation of a research team comprised of designers, engineers and EM/CA trained sociologists. The research involves direct observation and analysis of the relevance of the social order properties of ordinary language and communicative action for understanding – and revising – the design process and modeling systems on order properties of human communication. The current phase of this project is the elaboration of “Human Standards” by the engineers involved in this research project – in collaboration with sociologists. Currently popular “human Standards” have nothing to do with how humans actually make sense of the world. The standards we are elaborating are based on actual empirical studies of human standards requirements in the relevant workplaces. We have published one article based on this research, and there are a number of papers awaiting clearance for publication from this project (total all funding streams 3 years 1 million US).

1990-1994 Co-Principal Investigator, with David W. Britt Co-Principal Investigator, funded by the Skillman Foundation, a video based inter-generational training program coordinated between sociology and the PACT program. The project also developed new curriculum for the sociology department. (Three year award $362,265.50)

1990 Exploratory study of Race Identity issues facing minority youth, extensive use of video technology and Interactional Analysis. Funded by CULMA, Wayne State University. ($3,000)

1989 Pilot study of Race Identity issues, utilizing Interactional Analysis and video technology. Funded by the College of Liberal Arts. ($600)

B. Research not funded:

1989-Present. Ongoing study of inter-racial Interaction involving more than ten years of interviews, observations and videotaped interactions – focusing on interactional practices. Initial findings provide the foundation for a book manuscript and several articles. Additional funding will be sought. The preliminary results have provided classroom materials, a draft manuscript and several articles and presentations.

1994-2006. Ongoing study of interactional issues related to Blindness with an EM/CA emphasis. This is co-authored research with a former student, Derek Coates, and we have presented several papers and have a book in draft.

C. Research Reports Authored:

2008 With Dave Mann, JoAnn Brooks and Deb Boudeau, Final Report for the MITRE Corporation grant under the summer scout MSR Project entitled “Ethnomethods for Complex Technical Negotiation” (MSR Project 05MSR124-A7, July – September 2007 extended through September 2008).

1994 Final Report for Year Three of the Skillman Intergenerational Training Grant.

1993 Mid-Year Report for Year Three of the Skillman Intergenerational Training Grant.

1992 Final Report for Year Two of the Skillman Intergenerational Training Grant.

1992 Six Month Report for Year Two of the Skillman Intergenerational Training Grant.

1991 Final Report for Year One of the Skillman Intergenerational Training Grant.

1991 Six Month Report for Year One of the Skillman Training Grant.

D. Essays/Theses/Dissertations Directed:

Lynetta Mosby, PhD Thesis Advisor

Dissertation research on the delivery of social service to urban African American parents at risk of child abuse with particular emphasis on interactional troubles. Tenured as an Associate Professor at Oakland University. Lynetta Directed the New program in Social Work and Sociology coordinated with the University of Michigan.

Gary David, PhD Thesis Advisor

Dissertation research on interaction between Arab store owners and African American patrons. The research based on detailed analysis of interactions occurring in the stores combined with extensive demographic and questionnaire information. Gary and I have authored several papers together and continue to engage in collaborative research. Currently an Associate Professor of Sociology with tenure at Bentley University.

Bonnie Wright, PhD Thesis Advisor

Dissertation research on the role of practice in church worship services with a view toward comparing churches that serve an urban African American population and those that aspire to a whiter middle class model of worship. The research is very focused on practice in detail and has involved years of field research in a variety of churches. Bonnie is an Assistant Professor at Ferris State University, Michigan.

Sue Rumph, MA Thesis Advisor, PhD Thesis Advisor

MA thesis research on the National Organization for women was conducted with a view toward understanding the differences between black and white feminism that are causing practical problems for the organization. Sue was able to negotiate unrestricted access to NOW and all of its files. She was also able to travel around the country and interview most of the original members of the organization. The original founding African American members were particularly open and helpful

Jennifer Diericks, PhD Thesis Advisor

Jennifer is currently working on a project that involves an assessment of the impact of the new camera car technology on policing. Working closely with Albert Meehan she has been able to negotiate access to the video files of two police departments. It is the first study of the way in which video tapes are actually used by police departments and the only assessment of their actual impact on policing. Jennifer is currently at the University of Massachusetts Lowell and we are co-authoring several publications.

Waverly Duck, MA Thesis Advisor, PhD Thesis Advisor

Waverly has been a postdoctoral Fellow at Yale for the past three years and in the Fall of 2010 will take up a position as an Assistant professor at the University of Pittsburg. We have co-authored several papers together while he has been at Yale. His thesis raised the question of to what extent problems of blocked economic opportunity have impacted on the African American conception of manhood such that this conception conflicts with help-seeking behaviors and thus contributes to poor health among African American men.

Derek Coates, PhD Thesis Advisor

Derek has developed an entirely unique way of studying problems associated with blindness through the detailed practices involved in conversational turntaking. Simply put the sight impaired have trouble speaking because they cannot see. Derek received an NSF grant to support his dissertation research. He has the full cooperation of several schools and organizations for the blind around the country and several agencies are supporting his research. Derek has taken a position at UC Berkeley.

Ramona Coates, PhD Thesis Advisor

Ramona has developed an interest in cultural differences between Caribbean and African American students. She has gained access to a number of different Universities and is exploring the ways in which these differences impact negatively upon both groups of students because they are not recognized by the majority culture.

E. Course or Curriculum Development at Bentley University:

PhD 1550, Qualitative Methods II. When I taught this course in Fall 2008 I developed a new course proposal and syllabus for the course – emphasizing empirical studies of work and workplace studies.

SO 241, The existing course on diversity and minorities was developed into a course that focuses on the history of race and minority relations and includes a broader focus on problems and issues in interactions between race and minority groups. With continuing innovations I have taught this course most years since coming to Bentley and have often used materials from my own research. This course is now on the books as a course focused more on interaction – in keeping with departmental and personal research and teaching objectives – and the name has been changed to reflect this.

SO 242, The core course in sociology, formerly called Social Problems, has been changed to focus more on problems of alienation and trust in modern societies – and to take up issues that are current in conflicts between western capitalist countries and traditional societies based on custom and traditional religious ritual. The name has been changed to Trust in Modern society to reflect a growing concern with problems of trust and alienation in the work of major social theorists, and the writings of Durkheim and Garfinkel play a key role in the course. I have taught this course most years since coming to Bentley.

SO 402, Seminar in Sociology. This is the capstone course that we ran for the first time in the spring of 2006. The course combines a detailed focus on workplace studies and instructed action with readings in philosophy, and social theory. The idea is for the practical problems that students will face in the business workplace to be connected firmly with theoretical questions through this course.

SO 264 Technology and Society. This course examines ethnographic and audio video research on cooperative practices in technical work. It combines a theoretical focus on the importance of cooperation with technical studies of cooperation as a constitutive force in actual work practices.

SO 271H Self and Society. This course treats Self as a social fact that needs to be cooperatively made as all other social facts need to be made through cooperative work. The course reexamines the sociological literature on Self through this perspective. Students make a series of observations of the cooperative making of self as a social fact.

F. Course or Curriculum Development at Wayne State University

Race and Racism. Introductory level course that I designed to familiarize students with sociology through the substantive area of race relations.

Critical Theory & Interactionism: a graduate course in social theory focusing on current issues in continental social theory and interactionism in the United States.

Special Topics in Social Theory: Durkheim: a graduate course focusing on Durkheim's Elementary Forms. The course is intended as a vehicle for teaching basic issues in philosophy as well as for exploring Durkheim's work.

Special Topics in Social Theory: Marianne Weber: a graduate courses designed to explore the work of Weber and its relationship to the work of both Marx and Max Weber. The implications for both feminist theory and interactionism are explored.

Law, Race and Racism in American History: a new course in 1991 jointly taught with a professor from the law school.

Race, Class and the Criminal Justice System: new in 1990 now in its tenth year as one of five required core courses in Criminal Justice. Cross listed with Africana studies.

Qualitative Methods: a new graduate course in 1991 it has become the required qualitative methods course in sociology. The course familiarizes graduate students with qualitative techniques current in the field. The laboratory funded by my research is used in teaching this course.

Interactional Analysis. This advanced qualitative methods course, introduced in 1993, is the second part of the required qualitative methods series. I approach the qualitative study of society in a way that is uniquely my own. Student learn to use what I call Interaction Analysis for the study of what I call Interaction Orders, making extensive use of audio and video materials in the video laboratory funded by my Skillman grant.

Race and Racism in American Political and Social Institutions: focuses on the close relationship between race relations and the development of basic American political and social institutions. Current debates over the politics of identity and implications for democratic government are examined.

G. Course Materials (Published and Unpublished):

Since 1990 I have been using unpublished manuscript material in race relations and video tapes from my race interaction research in several of my courses. I have continued to use these materials at Bentley as they develop and the class often actively participates in the ongoing research.

Materials from my seminars on Durkheim at Wayne State have appeared as a book and several papers on Durkheim. These are designed specifically to make the teaching of Durkheim more accessible to students. While not teaching courses specifically on Durkheim at Bentley, I include Durkheim's Division of Labor in Society in several courses and use my own materials when I do so.

Since coming to Bentley I have been using both of my edited books with Garfinkel in my introductory and upper level courses. Garfinkel designed much of his work as tutorials for students and I find that they work surprisingly well in the introductory course.

I also developed materials on feminism and capitalism based on my research on Marianne Weber and have used these materials in several courses and seminars at Bentley University.
